Organizational Readiness for Evaluation Capacity Development

Connie Walker-Egea, Ph.D.

This presentation will provide a description of a checklist containing the components identified in the literature known to contribute to developing evaluation capacity within organizations. To establish or strengthen an internal evaluation system through evaluation capacity, it is necessary to identify first the existing capacity and the status of that system in an organization. Because each organization is unique, the level of preparedness to develop evaluation capacity is also unique, making necessary to determine its organizational readiness to develop evaluation capacity.
